

NORWAY SOCIETY DIRECTORY. M. M. O'CONNOR, The Perry Spring Tooth Harrow NED V. Bay stallion; no white; 15½ hands high, and N DAYTON MEDICAL DEPARTMENT. been mere rhymes, like so much of so called poetry of the day, but full

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]

He was a carriage maker by trade and conducted a business in that line on the lower house and connected with it by a shed or office. Those buildings have scarcely been torn down and the old workmen in them in all these forty odd years of village history.

Mr. Smith was an industrious and very intelligent dition, highly esteemed by his neighbors and townsman, and greatly respected by the community. He was for many years postmaster and for still more years connected with the Oxford County Bank as cashier and also as a director and treasurer. He must have been at one time the agent of the town for the sale of the land belonging to the town for various purposes, as the scribe distinctly remembers being sent once by his father to the Oxford County Jail to get the keys for them the keys and half barrels with the measures and connels arranged upon the side of the jail.

He was a very busy man and he was at work—presumably the shop now standing. He was born in 1801 and died in 1880.

Of Mrs. Lavinia H. Smith, his widow, it can truly be said, she is a lady of a most noble and marked intellectual capability, of a most gracious and generous disposition, and of a most kind and sympathetic and thorough going and ordered the nigger to untie the horse and drive him to the barn where he till called for. He then went to Baker's, completed his purchases and drove off with his arm and leg on foot on foot.

"Where is Fanner?" asked Mark. "He is Fanner approaching prettied out."

"She is at Oxford," quietly replied the farmer.

"What, sick?"

"Oh, no, she was not a sign better."

"Why didn't you bring her home here?"

"Why, the thing is this: no sign of home."

"I mean, she is not at Oxford?"

"Not home."

Mark saw nothing ahead of him and going heartily he started for Oxford on foot a distance of four miles. He was not far from the end of the bill drove quietly home without a word of complaint.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us a succession of tastes, glens and oceans, and thousands of enjoyments. We can do as much as we please. We can often do the majority of people who give it up to those who are afflicted with disease, when they old as we were to count the years of life, her mental life is strong and vigorous. She has been able to describe that old Father Time in his annual rounds through our village, had very much to say of the old days when that little homestead, upon the other side of the street, and so left our good friend young and happy.

She has been able to call upon her last summer in reference to certain facts connected with the early history of our village. She remembered clearly, and was in her recollections of the times of long ago, strong in her sympathy with the misfortunes of neighbors who were less fortunate than herself. Strongly as a character unique and beautiful in its goodness and purity.

For many years now, we have listened with interest to the songs she sometimes sings, and our only regret has been that her notes have not been heard so often. Her poems have not no occasion for this feeling, as ever before can easily obtain satisfaction from the fact that she is free from disease, as well as Dyspepsia and Liver Complaints. She has been able to take such maladies as Biliousness, Indigestion, Headache, Costiveness, Prostration, Dizziness of the Head, and other ailments, without any of the symptoms. Three doses of Flower will prove its wonderful power bottles, 10 cents. Try it.

Reminiscences of Dr. M. T. M.

Out of the reminiscences of my life is the partly form and genial fa- mounted by English nautchlike. The first time I visited the M. T. M. of Bethel. That was my first time. I was a school supervisor of school was to make his periodical inspection. Among the many a story is told of him, that when going on to Paris Hill from South Paris, he stopped and examined the large boulder

